
In plain terms: each bar is how often a model "sees" a device on an X-ray crop that has no device on it.
Bars above the dashed line make things up too often to trust; only Scout stays under the line on the harder, real-device test.